Sergei Isupov: PAST & PRESENT

Solo Exhibition of New Works

North Adams, MA – Ferrin Contemporary is proud to present new works from internationally renowned sculptor Sergei Isupov. Sergei Isupov: PAST & PRESENT features new ceramic sculptures presented with both a multi-dimensional, mixed-media wall installation and independent pedestal based works. Isupov and Ferrin Contemporary have been working together and presenting exhibitions internationally since 1996 and this will be the artist's third solo show in our North Adams gallery location.

This exhibition comes at a particularly sensitive time for the artist. Born in Stravapole, Russia in 1963, Isupov is the son of a painter and sculptor. He was raised and educated in Kyiv, Ukraine and Tallinn, Estonia when both of these now separate countries were part of the USSR. International recognition came early in his career, working in independent Estonia prior to his move to the United States in 1994. Isupov has been based in the Berkshires region of Massachusetts since 2006. Now, with his wife, artist Kadri Parnaments and their daughter Roosi, they divide their time between two studios/homes in the USA and Estonia.

Isupov's family, his father, mother and brother, all established artists, currently reside in Kyiv, Ukraine. With the backdrop of the current war there and threats of Russian aggression in Estonia, Isupov's recent studio work took on an urgency to counter the overwhelming anxiety and concern for his family facing down threats to their safety and the loss of their formerly peaceful lives.

"This show was especially poignant to watch develop and see the images emerge that express fear, worry, and emotions through the narratives he paints. We are neighbors and share a daily exchange. Concerned about the awful news coming out of Kyiv, I would ask about his mother Nelli, learn she was OK, momentarily relieved. Sergei would return to the studio, to the cycle of worry, processing emotions through the illustration details in his time intensive surfaces," says Leslie Ferrin, founding director of Ferrin Contemporary and Project Art, where this exhibition was produced.

This exhibition places him in an unintentional conversation with those post-war artists who were processing the horrors of WWII through their art, artists such as Dorothea Tanning, Max Ernst, and Salvador Dalí. "Isupov has always worked with themes and methods associated with the surrealists. Using the subconscious as a guide and a unique approach to representing the body, traditional narratives are upended. Couple that with a distinct material approach and Isupov evokes a deep emotional response in the viewer," says Lauren Levato Coyne, gallery director.

This nonlinear narration, combined with Isupov's unmatched masterful skills as both painter and sculptor resulted in works that draw from the past and reflect on the present. Semi-autobiographical, Isupov's intimate narratives interweave poignant representations of men and women, parents and children, shown alongside one another, their pets pointing to the naive sense of security we hold in our daily lives. These works explore individual, interior landscapes and the continually expanding dualities of the self within complex psychological relationships. Intensely personal yet universal, these works in the context of the present day, remind and call upon us to value, protect and preserve the precarious balance we all stand to lose at any present moment.

Isupov pushes the "in the round" idea of a sculpture to its apex by creating a narrative form that is then painted, using stain and glaze, to deepen the story. "Like an Eternity," pictured above, is a prime example of Isupov's skill. He sculpts a form that becomes both man ready to fight and another man, or possibly a moon or ghost, in quiet observation. Two couples occupy different landscapes on their journeys, recto and verso of the piece, and their nakedity and or their brightly clothed bodies reveal and conceal their emotional states. Symbols of hope and confusion depicted as decorative shapes feature threatening clouds, caged animals, beams of light. We can't help but wonder what did, or what will, become of them.

Sergei Isupov: PAST & PRESENT is a body of several new works in ceramic including a wall-based installation of both ceramic, paper, and other materials. TurnPark Art Space: Earth & Sky fire sculpture

In addition to his solo exhibition at Ferrin Contemporary, Isupov will be building his first US, site-specific, massive standing dual figural sculpture to be fired on Sat., June 11 at TurnPark Art Space. This Earth & Sky fire sculpture and performance firing event is the third collaboration with Estonian Andres Allik who has designed and built petal kilns with Isupov in Star, NC and Skaelskor, Denmark. This will be the first petal kiln in New England. TurnPark Art Space is a sculpture park, contemporary art center, and event venue in West Stockbridge, MA.

Additionally, TurnPark will present Proximal Duality, a collection of Isupov's works that are conceptually related to the Earth & Sky fire sculpture. Curated by Grigori Faytev, these works explore duality in relationships through physical forms, painted surfaces, and large scale drawings on paper since 2008. Isupov's Earth & Sky fire sculpture will be the centerpiece of TurnPark's Annual Summer Festival which presents an array of multicultural performances, visual artworks, and music under the theme of Healing Flames. The festival begins at 4pm during the hottest part of the firing and will continue until the kiln is opened and reveals the red hot sculpture at 10pm. This event will also serve as a fundraiser to help the people of Ukraine.

A variety of performances and visual artworks will be presented on the TurnPark Art Space grounds along with music, food, drink, and activities for kids. Visit turnpark.com for more info and to purchase tickets; children under 12 free.
